

Spiritual Journey: The Monastic Way

The paths of God in man, and the paths of man in God, can only be traced by those who have ventured therein. These are hidden paths. Although entirely interior and vitally inherent in man, these paths are so deeply hidden in the innermost depths of each one of us that they can be perceived only by those who have received some presentiment or foretaste of them. Such is the paradox of the divine pedagogy with humanity, that God is at the same time infinitely near man while seemingly to be infinitely distant and so very alien to him. Only the witness can speak of this reality with some possibility of convincing. And even then, only if God has previously awakened a like stranger savor within the heart of the one whose words these words.
