Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: ...A number of similar cases might be described, but the histories above given are sufficient to illustrate what judicious treatment can do in late syphilis, and are consequently as valuable as a larger number would be. Untoward Effects Of Iodin.--Like the unpleasant effects of mercury, those of iodine require more than casual attention. In the first place, the iodides may cause sudden and severe ptyalism in patients who have been taking mercury freely, simply by suddenly liberating and rendering active the latter drug. On this account, caution should be exercised in the use of the iodides in such cases as have been under a prolonged course of mercurials. It will also be found in every case that iodine has a special action upon the salivary glands, whether the patient has been taking mercury or not. Within a very short time after taking a full dose of potassic iodide the iodine can be distinctly tasted, and the saliva, and mucus from the nasal passages, will exhibit a decidedly yellowish tinge. The nasal mucus, especially, will be greatly increased in amount. Iodism.--The most important of the evils that may be caused by the iodides is the condition known as iodism. This consists in a feeling of depression and malaise, nervous irritability, tinnitus aurium; neuralgic or rheumatic pains in various situations, especially in the bones and muscles; and irritation of the various mucous surfaces, especially those of the eyes and nose. The latter symptom may be merely a mild coryza or may amount to a very severe inflammatory edema of the conjunctiva and nasal and lacrymal apparatuses. Violent diarrhea and vomiting, with severe griping pain, may occur from the irritant action of the drug upon the gastrointestinal mucosa, and may necessitate its complete suspensio...
